WHARF AND WAVE.

The bark Albert will leave for San Francisco today.

The bark Velocity has been docked and will commence discharging today.

The schooner Sadie arrived at Kahului, from San Francisco, on Friday. She was out fifteen days.

Several sailors belonging to the Amy Turner have deserted. The vessel will soon leave for the Orient.

The bark Velocity, Captain Martin, arrived on Saturday, ninety-three days from Hongkong. Light winds caused the long voyage. She is anchored in the stream.

All the mail matter sent here for the French warship Duguay-Trouin, has been returned to San Francisco. Evidently, the captain of the vessel has changed his mind and will not put in here.

The steamers leaving today are: The W. G. Hall for Maui and Hawaii at 10 a.m., the Claudine for Maui, the Mokoli for Molokai and the Mikahala for Kauai, all at 5 o'clock.

The captain of the Pacific Mail steamer San Jose recently had trouble at Corinto, Nicaragua, with the authorities. Armed forces menaced the vessel and her passengers. The captain was refused permission to telegraph the facts to United States Minister Baker.

A fire broke out in the hold of the steamer Gaelic, while she was lying at the Mail dock in San Francisco recently. The fire, which was extinguished by the crew, broke out in a heap of mats and dunnage stowed in the hold, and did little damage.

A recent dispatch to the Merchants' Exchange at San Francisco, from Waneta, B. C., says that the steamer Columbia, the property of the Columbia and Kootenai Navigation Company, was burned and totally destroyed near there recently. No lives were lost. The loss will reach $75,000.

On the last trip of the steamer Gaelic to San Francisco, she had only one Chinese passenger to land, and the officers accounted for the phenomenal absence of the Mongolians by the fact that the Chinese Government would not allow any of their able-bodied men to leave the country pending the result of the war with Japan.

D. L. Jones, first mate of the British ship Dichmont, who was in irons for sixty days on the trip to San Francisco, has filed charges against Captain Sauter with the British Consul. Sauter attempted to compromise with the mate, but Jones would not listen to it. He believes that he has been unjustly treated and asks for an inquiry.
William Holland, a well-known water-front character, is dying at the City and County Hospital, says the San Francisco Examiner. He became notorious by putting the body of a dead man in the old bark California in place of one of the crew who could not be found. When the bark returned an entry in the log read: "James O'Brien died of alcoholism on the first day from port. Body buried at sea."

When the Alameda arrived at San Francisco last Captain Morse was seen by an Examiner reporter and this is the result: "The rebellion in Samoa is settled, and Captain Morse of the steamer describes the situation there in a few words. He says there is no war there. The natives are just lying round and doing nothing. These war rumors and attempts at rebellion are only started to keep a man-of-war around the islands so that a little ready money can be secured from the sailors who get shore leave, so that the salaries of the King and his Councilors can be paid."

POISON FROM PEACH TREES.

The Prussic Acid in the Leaves Killed a Flock of Sheep.

"Taking a drink of this cherry sirup," said a doctor as he quenched his thirst at a soda water fountain, "reminds me of a catastrophe we had out on our farm one summer. You think it strange that a drink of soda water should bring a farm incident into my mind. Well, it is peculiar, but every time I taste amygdalic acid, and this cherry is filled with it, I call to mind an incident which cost my father quite a sum of money. My father was a great sheepgrower and took pride in the high grade of stock he raised. He also had a great deal of the farm planted with peach trees, to which he devoted much of his time.

"One summer when I was a boy something went wrong with the trees, necessitating the cutting off of many of the branches. The branches were strewn all over the grass of the peach grove where the sheep were wont to rest in the shade. A short time after this my father lost nearly all his sheep within a day by what seemed to be the result of some poison. He could account for the wholesale slaughter of all the sheep dying with similar symptoms in no way except it was the work of some enemy. I concluded to find out what caused the sheep to die.

"It was my first work in diagnosing, and it became so interesting to me that it influenced me in choosing my profession later. I worked hard to find if the sheep had eaten anything in the shape of a poisonous weed, but failed to trace it to this cause. It suddenly came into my mind that the sheep that had been penned in another part of the farm and had not been in the peach grove were the only ones that had escaped. So I concluded that the poison must be in the peach orchard. I noted the branches of the peach trees which had been cut still lying upon the ground, and something told me that these branches held the secret. I called on a physician to get some information about drugs, for as a boy I knew nothing in the way of deadly things except the 'poison vine' and other reputed noxious plants.

"I asked him if the peach branches could have poisoned the sheep. 'Why, certainly,' he replied. 'They could poison with the deadliest poison known. When a branch of a peach tree is fresh, the leaves contain what we call amygdalic acid, which of itself is not the best thing to take into the system. But let that branch lie in the hot sun, and the chemical action of the heat upon this comparatively harmless amygdalic acid transforms it into the most deadly poison known as hydrocyanic or prussic acid, so, my young friend, you have struck the cause of the death of your father's sheep. They have died of hydrocyanic acid poisoning.' From that time on I became interested in medicines until I graduated a full fledged doctor. I often look back upon the little incident which had a great influence in shaping my career. Now, you don't think the connection between a glass of cherry soda water and the killing of a lot of sheep so strained after all."—Pittsburg Dispatch.

A Ghost Story.

Here is a ghost story—one of a large class and therefore more likely to be veracious, especially as it first saw the light in a London paper. It has an appearance of strict and even narrow truthfulness. There was a certain Captain Blomberg, of some regiment unknown, on active service in America. Five or six of his brother officers, he being engaged on duty 200 miles away, were dining together. The door was opened, and Captain Blomberg appeared, to everybody's surprise. Without speaking, he walked in and sat down in a vacant chair. They all asked him how he came there.

To their questions he made no reply. Then one of them said, "Blomberg, are you mad?"

On this he rose and replied, "When you go back to London, take my son to the queen and beg her to be his protector."

This said, he walked out of the room as he had come in. A few days afterward the news came that he had been killed in action on the very day and at the same hour of his appearance.

Occupations of the French.

Some very interesting facts about France are quoted by one of the Paris papers. We are told that one-half of the population of France is dependent on agriculture for a living, one-quarter on industry, one-tenth on commerce, four-hundredths on liberal professions, and six-hundredths on incomes derived from funded property or stock. The number of land owners cultivating their own land is 9,176,000; bankers and merchants are set down at 789,000; manufacturers give employment to over 7,000,000; state functionaries form an army 805,000 strong, and there are 23,000 journalists and men of letters.—London Tablet.

Condensed Power.

She—Here I read in the paper that if the force employed by women in lacing their stays and buttoning the boots could be condensed it would more than suffice to drive all the machinery in the factories and the railway engines in the whole of Germany.

He—Good gracious! Why, then the concentrated power of their tongues would be capable of lifting the earth off its hinges!—Westfalscher Kurier.

Today the Best.

One of the illusions is that the present hour is not the critical, decisive hour. Write it on your heart that every day is the best day in the year. No man has learned anything rightly until he knows that every day is doomsday.—Emerson.

Arabian race horses were introduced into Europe by the Moors in 802.

COLOR HEARING.

Dr. Colman's Interesting Theory About the Relation of Sounds to Color.

John Locke's blind man, who hazarded the guess that the color scarlet was probably something like the sound of a trumpet, is generally thought to have simply spoken according to his lights, or rather lack of lights, but it appears from Dr. W. S. Colman's articles on this subject that we have now laid the foundation of a science of color hearing. The term is defined by him as applying to the special case in which a color sensation is excited by some auditory stimulus—as, for example, by the pronunciation of the vowel sounds. It is not a matter of association, as in the case of the "shrill squeak" evoked by the filing of a saw or the drawing of a slate pencil down a slate. Dr. Colman estimates the number of people who possess the faculty of color hearing as under 12 per cent and mentions a case described by Flournoy, in which the vowel "i" awakened the impression of an orange circle with an "i" in black in the center.

Theophile Gautier, under the influence of hashish, heard the sound equivalents (whatever they may have been) of various colors. The notion is, at all events, of respectable antiquity. Dr. Colman cites as believers in color hearing Hoffman, Goethe and Hans Sachs and refers to the case of St. Catharine of Siena, who had a "bright red color sensation whenever she saw or thought of the host." The Lancet, which comments learnedly on Dr. Colman's theories, feels disposed to think that the red ribbon which adorns the dark blue bonnet of the female members of the Salvation Army is a parallel case and not difficult to explain on the principles of conventional metaphor.—London News.

Matrimonial Separations in Egypt.

The liveliest divorce centers of the west have to take second place when compared with matrimonial separations in Egypt, according to the accounts of the American consul to the land of the Nile. He tells of an alteration that took place between one of his most trusted servants and a veiled lady, his wife, which squabble resulted in a divorce in less than five minutes. The scene opened with reproaches emanating from the woman. "Take care," warned the man. "I put you from me!" Nothing daunted, the virago continued until the exasperated man again repeated, "I put you from me!" Still the torrent of abuse flowed incessantly. Worried beyond endurance, the servant entered the house and secured 30 shillings out of his year's salary of £10, and returning to the woman said: "Here is your dowry. Now for the third and last time I repeat, 'I put you from me.' At these words the woman went her way, and the astonished American learned that he had witnessed divorce proceedings, for in Egypt the assertion, "I put you from me," made three times to a wife by her husband, constitutes a solemn divorce without alimony, and once the words are said the woman has no right to any further support from the man.—Chicago Tribune.

Catching a Thief.

Saindo, one of the cleverest of the Paris detectives, was one day making his round of the Quartier du Temple when he found himself in a group listening to a man selling silver watches for 5 francs each. Saindo bought one, and having assured himself that it was genuine came to the not unnatural conclusion that these watches could not have been come by honestly.

The vendor was, however, a giant, and Saindo is by no means blessed with large proportions. He furthermore argued that there were confederates among the group. In a minute or two he had formed a plan. He asked the man to take a glass of wine, saying that he meant to purchase another watch. The offer was accepted, and a second watch was tendered, which Saindo pretended to examine. He, however, suddenly took to his heels, watch in hand. Thereupon the vendor pursued, crying: "Stop, thief!"

When Saindo got him as far as the police station, he turned around, clutched the other by the throat, and to the great astonishment of every one led his captive inside.—Paris Journal.

Winks That Pass In the Night.

An ingenious Brooklyn statistician estimates that united Brooklyn has over 100,000 cats, of which more than one-half are unsheltered. He considers it as a conservative estimate that 10 per cent of the 1,000,000 inhabitants of our sister city are kept awake at night by the howling of the 100,000. This makes one case of insomnia per cat and leads one to the conclusion that Brooklyn is a very sleepless city. If cats and insomnia prevail with equal virulence in other cities, it would follow that there are 6,000,000 cats and 6,000,000 cases of insomnia in America. Yet no notice is taken of this pathogenic factor by systematic writers on sleep.—Medical Record.

Posed as Bismarck.

A barber in Berlin, whose features bore a marked resemblance to those of Bismarck, created quite a new profession by sitting for photographs, which were afterward sold as portraits of the prince. Like the milkmaid of our story books, his face was his fortune until one fine day the police made it his misfortune and cast him, face and all, into a dungeon deep.—Berlin Letter.

Effie (after a pause)—Then why don't they hunt the butchers, mummy?—Punch.
